STANFORD, KY.

Let the people read it in reeling italics. This is a bona-fide CLOSING - OUT, not a CLEARANCE SALE! Four Thousand Dollars sold in November; Ten Thousand MUST go in December. This is the week for the Bloody Slaughter of Prices ! The biggest drives ever offered in Central Kentucky on First-Class Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Notions, Fancy Goods, Dry Goods, etc. Special Bargains in Overcoats. Gents' tailor-made Suits, stylish Hats, Gloves, Kentucky Jeans, Rubber Boots. Sandals, Arctics, Coats and Gossamers; Ladies' Wool Shawls, Skirts, Cloaks, Hosiery, Underwear, Fine Dress Goods, Trimmings. A special slaughter in medium Dress Fabrics, Ginghams, Flannels and Waterproofs. A fine display of Fancy Articles suitable for Christmas presents. The instructions to salesmen this week are: "Let 'em go! Sell 'em! Never mind the cost mark!" Now is the time and the Great Closing-Out Sale the place!

Having determined to quit the goods business on account of failing health, I have made up my mind to stand any sacrifice that is necessary to close out my

W. P. WALTON

THE old year whose expiring sighs are heard in the winds, has ro! heen such a bad one that we would haste its demise. While it has brought us as a nation no great wealth, it has left no trace of dire calamities such as 1883 was remarkable for, but has given us many causes for thankfulness. A scarcity of money and business depression have marked the latter days, but on the whole those who have labored have been ressonably well remunerated and have no cause to complair. The INTERIOR JOUR HAL is among the latter class and is proud to eay that it is prospering, even as well as we could expect under the circumstances. The names on our long subscription list embrace the best people in this section, while the paper finds its way to nearly every State in the Union and many countrice of the old world. We are Indeed grateful to our friends for the continued evidences of their good will in the shape of a liberal patronage and wish each of them all the blessings that they could sek tional, 11; State 22; savings 11; private (inor expect during the coming year.

DINNER FOR THREE

'N A PRISON STOCKADE, DECEMBER 25, 1864.

From Thanksgiving to Christmas-Three Spoonfuls of Gookes and Three of Meal-Watching a Tin "Gunboat"

- A Life-Time Memory.

INew York Sun.1 On the last Thursday of November, 1904, three of us sat in a shebaug in the prison sleckade at Florence, S. C. Shebang was the prison word for a dwelling constructed in this way. It was in the afternoon. We had received our daily rations—about three ablespoonfuls of gookas, or cow peas, and a little over a pint of corn meal-had cookel end eeten thom, and were sitting on the ground floor of the shebang, our eyes list-lessly turned roofwards, while our thoughts were as shallow as our faces.

We were elient for awhile. I was the first to speak:
"Thanksgiving's gone, boys, but if we live "Thanksgiving's gone, boys, but if we live and the speak and until Chrismas we can have a dinner, and won't be hungry after we have eaten it." "How!" inquired my two comrades eagerly.

"We won't feel much bingrier than we do now if we each put by a spoonful of meal end a spoonful of gookas every day from now until Christmas, and I think our sav-ings will make a dinner that will be satisfy-

After some discussion as to the relative strength of our appetite and our wills, it was decided to lay by our six spoonfuls of food every day, all agreeing that the spoonfuls should not be heaped, but even. I dreamed that night of feastling on all the good things in the way of food that I had ever heard of reaten. The next morning we made two hags of generous size. In the afternoon when our rations came, we put three spoonfuls of gookas in one bag and three spoonfuls of meal in the other. Every succeeding day the bags received their portion, and were felt of affectionately, to find out how much they contained.

Christmas morning, 1864, after being long waited for, came at last. The faint light of the morning found us stirring. We had toorded our fuel, saving a little every day. it was not an easy thing to do, for the daily fuel ration of ninety men was three sticks of pinewood of average size. To this aupply we had added by picking up every splinter as targe as a toothpick and every chip as large as a 10-cent piece that we discovered in our wanderings about the stockade.

The occupants of a shebang near our own, in addition to the usual cooking utensile. quart bottles and tin or sheet iron panspossessed a gunboat. This was a piece of old roading tin, made into a pan more than a foot long and about six inches wide and deep. The corners where the tin had been cut off or turned were soldered with corn meal. 1t was not sightly, but was convenient. We had bargalued before for the use of this gunboat.

The fire was lighted. The gookss had been soaked the night before, and were now put in the gunboat covered with water, and the gunboat was set over the fire upon two mul bricks made for the occasion. A watched not may not buil, but. a watched gunbont did, for three heads bent forward and six eyes gezed intently upon the contents of the vessel over the fire, until the water was bubbling and the peas dancing in and out among the bubbies.

At short intervals a few peas were taken out in a spoon and allowed to cool, and a pas was tasted by each of us and judgment given as to its being dons. Finally we were unanimous in the opinion that the gookas were cooked enough. Meal was brought forth and stirred in, and the pudding was allowed to remain on the fire until it had thickoned, so that there was danger of its being scorehed. The peas were dark skinned, and had given the pudding a purplish hue. The gunboat was lifted off and set on the ground to cool. While we were walting the fire was renewed. Corn meal saved for the purpose was put in a pan and thoroughly dried and browned. This corn coffee was divided into three portions, put in three quart kettles,

At last our dinner 'was ready. The gunbost was put on the ground in the center of the shebang, and we sat around it. Two of us had small tin paus and one a flat piece of sheet-iron for plates, and each had a spoon. Not one of us would have been called a religious man, but we hesitated, looke l at one another, bowed our heads and were still. But it was only for a moment, and then the Kentuckian volunteered to act as host, and helped us and himself. : When that dinner was over the content; of the guuboat and quart cups had vanished and it was just noon. After such unn-ual exortion we lay down, drew our biankets over us and slept. We were awakened near night by a neighbor, who called un that we might get our rations. After returning to the shebang the lowa man said: "Boys, I'il think of that dinner as long as I live. Why. I ain't hungry yet."

CHAPTER V. A WHITE TOMB.

From the moment when the true state of Philippa's mind flashed upon me, to the moment when I left her sleeping that heavy sleep, I had little time to think of anything else than the best means of saving her life, and, if possible, her reason. True, throughout the whole of my operations to effect this end, a dim sort of horror pervaded me-a recollection of the ghastly object which lay on the roadside, some three miles from us; but it was not until i turned from my patient's door that the terrible situation in in all its dread entirety. Half brokenhearted, I threw myself wearily into my chair, and covered my face with my hands.

He touched his hat in a be found. i felt certain that when inquiry was made suspicion would at once point toward Philippa. Mrs. Wilsen know of her starting from home in the evening, alone and on foot. She knew, moreover, that Sir | She had now elept for nearly eleven hours, Mervyn Ferrand was her husband; that he and I know that return to life might take had iil-used her. She would most certainly know to whom Philippa had fled. It did not follow that because I was Ignorant as to of the oplute were gone, how should I find I stood so much in need. who were my neighbors they knew nothing about me. At any rate, William, my man, would know the truth. So far as I could see, to-morrow, or by the latest, the next day Philippa would be arrested for the crime. Most probably I should also be included in the arrest. For that I seemed to care nothing; except that it might hinder me from helping my poor girl.

Any hope of removing Philippa—there, put it in plain words—any hope of flight, for days, oven weeks, was vain. Let every library 12mps. Bright & Curran.

thing go as well as can be in such came, the girl must be kept in seclasion and quiet for it least a fortnight or three weeks. I groaned as I thought of what would happen if Philippa was arrested and cerried hefore the magistrates, accused of the awful crime. From that moment until the day of her death she would be insane. Yet, what help was there for it? The moment the deed is known—the moment Mrs. Wilson learne that Sir Mervyn Ferrand hes been found shot through the heart, she will let it be known that Lady Ferrend is at hand; and Lady Ferrend, who has been passing under the name of Mrs. Farmer, will be sought and found. And then-and then!

Even if she did not die at once-even if she recovered -ob, the sname of the trial! No jury could or would convict her; but for Philippa, my queen, to stand in the dock, to plea i for her life. To know that, whether convicted or acquitted, the deed ance. Horrible! It shall never be. Rather will I give her a draught of opium beavy enough to close her eyes forever. There will be planty more a draught of the following afternoon. I began then to think the duration abnormal, and datasmined to take some steps towards arousing ber. drag loft for mal

Why did I not, at east, destroy any letters or papers which were about him! Identification might then have been rendered difficult, and perhaps been delayed for weeks. In that time I might have saved her.

Why do I not do this now! I started to my feet; then sank back into my chair. No; not even for Phillipa's sake could I go go again to thet spot. If I did so, I should return as mad as she is now.

Not being able to bring myself to adopt the grewsome alternative, I could do nothing save wait events-nothing, at least, to vert the consequences of her defirlous act. But for her something must be done. How foul I she, in her frenzied state, be left here -her only companions two men! Nurses must at once be procured. I summoned William on I told him he must go to London by the first train in the morning.

William would have received my lastructions to go to the Antipodes with impertur-bability. He merely expressed a doubt as to whether any one would, be able to get to London' to-morrow on account of the snow. walked to the window and leoked out...

The night was still one mad whirl of snow flakes. The window-pance were half covered by such as managed to find a resting place there. As I watched what I could see of the wild white dance, I found myself think ing that by now that dead men on the road must be covered an Inch-must have lost shape and outline. I shivered as I turned

'They are sure to keep the line to towa open," I said. "If you can get to Rodling, you can get to London." "Oh, I can get to Rodling right enough!"

said William Then I told him what he was to do. He was to take a lotter to one of the Nursing Institutions, and bring back two nurses with him. No matter what the weather was when they reached Roding, they were to come to my house at once, even if they had to hire twenty horses to drag them there. He was also to get me a few drugs that I might want.

William said no more. He nodded, to show that he understood me; and I knew if is were possible to do my bldding it would be done Of his own accord he then brought me

She lay there with a face like marble, calm and beautiful. The long, dark isshes swept her pale cheek, The only movement was the regular rice and fail of the bosom. Oh, happy oblivion! Oh, dreaded wakening! As I looked at her, in spits of the love I bore her, I believe that, had thought such a prayer would be answered, I should for her sake have prayed that those lankes might never again be lifted.

Morning at last broke on my dreary vigil. Philipps still slept. I returned to the sitting room and drew back the curtains from time window. Yas; It was morning-such a morning as leaden, wintry skles can give. It was still snowing as heavily, if not more heavily, than it had snowed last night. For twelvo hours the flakes had fallen without interralssion.

There was little wind now; it had dropped, knew about an hour ago. The world, so far as I could see, was clad in white: but the snow lay unevenly. The wind had blown it luto drifts. On my garden path Its depth inight he counted by inches; against my garden wall by feet.

William now made his appearance. He prepared some breakfast for himself, and then, having slow justice to it, started for Boding. It occurred to me that he might to the first to find the object which lay on he roudsi ie.

Except that so doing might delay him and cause him to miss the train, this mattered which she was placed presented liseif to me little. I was now calmly awaiting the inevitable. Some one must make the diacovery. However, as I wanted the nurses, I,

I knew that the chances were a thousand to one that her brain would still be full of strange delusions; that she would turn from me, as she turned last night, with loathing and anger. But my greatest fear was that she would, upon coming to herself. or rather to her poor insaneself, be conscloud of the act she had accomplished. It was the fear of this which made me wish that the epium would hold-her in its drowsy grasp for house longer.

This wish was granted. Hour after hour I sat by his motioniess form. Now and egaln I gianced from the beautiful, senseless face, and looking out of the window saw the enow still falling. Would my meesonger ever be able to reach town; if he did so, would he be able to return? I was bound to have a women's aid. The presence of the roughest daughter of the plow would be welcome to me when Philippa awoks. And

It was now time she dld so. Although I felt her pulse almost every other minute, and could find no reason for alarm, I am bound to say that her long sleep, protracted far beyond any I had in my experience seen profuced by the exhibition of narcotles, rendere I me very unsasy. She looked at me in a dazzi manner, not at first eccuring to know me, or to understand why I was near her, or where she was. A proy to the wildest auxiety, I leaned over her and waited until she spoke.

Little by little her bewilderment seemed to leave her. Her eyes rested with curious inquiry upon mine. "Itasil," she said faintly, but in a tone of surprise, "you here! Where "Under my roof-your brother's roof," I

"Ahl I remember," she said, with a deep sigh. Then she closed her eyes, and once more seemed to sleep.

What did she remember! It seemed to me too great a morey to expect that those hours of oblivion had effected a cure, but my hope was that she did not remember what had happened when sho met Sir Mervyn Ferrend on the road. i was aimost trambling with excitement, i was longing to really know in what state her mind was. Besides, I thought she had slept as long as was good for her. I took her hands and called her by name. Once more the opened her eyes. They expressed no fear of me, no dislike to me. They conveyed no reproach. They were calen, earl, weary, but gave no evidence of my mautal disorder.

"Have I been fil long, Basilf' she asked. "Not very long. You are going to get better soon.

"I came to your house, did I not?" "Yes; and here I mean to keep you. Do rou feel weak!

"Very weak. Basil, I have dreamed such horrible things." "You have been feverish and delirious. People like that always fancy strange

She was, indeed, as weak as a child; but for the time, at least, she was perfectly same. I could have cried for. joy as I heard her faint but collected words. I ventured to hope that I had before me one of those very rare cases—such as I had seen described, but had not as yet met with-where the patient awakes from a long, artificiallyproduced sleep perfectly free from all maniacal symptoms. If this were so with Philippa, if the return of reeson were to be ermanent, I knew that a few weeks' vareful nursing and judicious treatment might quite restore her to health. Even as this comforting thought came to me, I remembered the peril in which she stood. Tomorrow-aye, even to-day—the thing which all the good the parcotic had done her

She was now fully awake, and perfectly quiet. I gave bergeome refreshment; then coing she was lying. In peaceful sl'ence, I thought it better to leave bor. : As I quitted ber room I jiraw down the blind, fearing that the whirling mow night bring recollections which It was my one wish to keep from invading her mind.

The long, dreary day wore away. The light faded, and another night degan. - Philippa still-lay calm, sileat, and almost apathetic. I did nothing to rouse her. I went to her side as seldom as possible. I feared that her seeing mo might recall the events of the last night, and that recollections so awekened might destroy all the good which I felt aure had been accomplished by the long hours of oblivion and quiet, Could I have deputed my task to another, I would not have even shown myself to my patient. Most anxiously, as evening came, I awaited the appearance of my faithful William and

Would they be able to reach us in such weather? It was still snowing floreely. For more than twenty-four hours the mad white ravel had continued without intermission. Indeed, that storm which burst upon the world as I turned from Philippa's house on the preceding night is now historical; it was the beginning of the heaviest and longest fall which the record of fifty years can show. For two nights and a day the snow came down in what may almost be called drifting masses. During that dismal day I saw from the window the heaps against the wail grow deeper and deeper, and even in my preoccupled state of mind found myself marvelfing at the sustained fury of the atorm.

After all, it seemed that William had found it impossible to fight against the weather, so I made my preparations for another night of solitary watchfuiness. I was all but worm out with fatigue; yet I dared not size. the mania returned, what might happen were I not at hand to restrain Philippa's actional My hope that the madness had really left my patient, not, if she were properly treated, to return, was a growing one, but not yet strong enough to allow me to leave her for any length of time.

My delight then may be imagined when, looking for the hundredth time up the road, I saw close at hand two finshing lights, and knew that William, the falthful, had done my bldding. In a few minutes two respectable women from one of the best of the London nursing institutions were within my wails. The train had, of course, been late, very iate. At one or two places on the line It had almost given up the battie, and set tled down quietly until dug out; but steam and Iron had conquered, and at inst It did get to Roding. There William, knowing my dire necessity, offered such a magnificent bribe that he soon found an enterprising carriage proprietor who was willing to make the attempt to force two horses and a carrlage over six miles of road between Roding and my house. The attempt was successful, aithough the rate of progression was slow and William triumphantiy ushered bls
